Jolo Emergency Rescue Network

Violence can scare anybody out of even his or her very own hometown. But not this group of youth volunteers. Instead of running away when a series of bombing and shooting incidents rocked Jolo in 2006, these young men and women decided to organize themselves and provide emergency medical services to victims. Thus was born the Jolo Emergency Rescue Network.

Its members are trained medical first-responders who provide ambulance services, trauma management and critical pre-hospital care to emergency victims when necessary. With just over 50 active members, the organization has been able to respond to 200 medical cases and 8 fire calls in their community.

In order to further improve their emergency response, the group set up its very own 911 emergency number with the support of the local telecommunications provider. It boasts of a 2-3 minute response time, good enough to rival any emergency team in the country.

The efforts of the Jolo Emergency Rescue Network helped save countless lives and though they are faced with a tough task, the members are even more determined to carry on. They are planning more training to make members better equipped to handle more emergency cases, knowing that in a town where violence is almost normal and emergency cases abound, even the smallest contributions from concerned citizens, even the youth, could go a long way in saving lives.

Congratulations!
Jolo Emergency Rescue Network, Inc.
